Dear Fatima,

I hope this email finds you well amidst your incredibly busy schedule, especially with the new $4M Global Education Initiative grant and your upcoming Urban Planning Journal presentation.

I'm writing to you with some urgent news regarding our 'Post-Colonial Literature: A Novel Approach' manuscript that was submitted to the World Water Congress Proceedings. I've just received a highly time-sensitive round of feedback from the editors, highlighting a few critical points that require immediate attention. It seems they want these addressed by tomorrow evening at the absolute latest if we want to avoid further publication delays.

I've collated all their comments and my suggested responses/edits into the attached file, "manuscript_updates.docx". Could you please open it and review the proposed changes as soon as your schedule permits? Your input on these specific points is crucial before we submit our final revision.

I apologize for the short notice, but given the tight deadline, I felt it best to send this over right away. Please let me know once you've had a chance to look at it so we can discuss and finalize our submission.

Best regards,
Hiroshi
