Dear Liam,

Hope you're doing well, despite what I imagine is a hectic schedule with the upcoming International Symposium on Fundamental Forces and the new Materials Research Council grant.

I'm writing regarding our 'Explainable AI: A Novel Approach' paper that was published in IEEE Transactions on Quantum Engineering. We've received an unexpected, but extremely time-sensitive request from the journal editor. It seems they want to include a very minor, but critical, set of clarifications to a few core arguments before the final publication batch goes to print next week. This is highly unusual for a post-publication request, but apparently it's a new policy for high-impact articles.

Emily and I have made the necessary adjustments and compiled them into the attached document, "manuscript_updates.docx". It's crucial that you review these changes immediately to ensure they align with our original intentions and findings. They need our approval by end of day tomorrow at the absolute latest, otherwise we risk a significant delay or even a retraction notice if we don't respond promptly.

I know how incredibly busy you are, especially with the presentation preparation for the Symposium next month and managing the new $4M computer vision grant, but this simply cannot wait. Please open the attachment and send your approval or any quick edits back as soon as humanly possible.

Thanks so much for your quick attention to this.

Best,

Alex
