Hi Richard,

I hope this email finds you well.

I just received some extremely last-minute, critical feedback from the Journal of Distributed Systems regarding our 'Biomaterials: A Novel Approach' paper. It seems there's a new, unexpected editorial policy clarification impacting how we've presented some of the data's long-term implications, especially concerning the societal impact of biomaterials. They've highlighted a few sections that require immediate rephrasing to comply.

This is quite a surprise, given how far along we were, but it's crucial we address this promptly. The feedback specifically touches upon areas that could potentially affect how our findings are perceived in the context of broader material policy, which I know is something you often provide insights on, and also highly relevant to your new $3M grant from the Materials Research Council.

I've made initial adjustments and clarifications, and marked them clearly in the attached document, "manuscript_updates.docx". Could you please review it immediately? We absolutely need to send this back to them by end of day today to avoid any significant delays in publication, or worse, a rejection for non-compliance. Your final review is essential to ensure we handle this correctly and protect the integrity of our work.

Please let me know your thoughts as soon as you've had a chance to look.

Best regards,

Grace
